EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Texas is the second largest state in our nation, in both area and population, and it continues to grow in population, commerce, and industry. A basic requirement to ensuring that citizens and businesses can manage their affairs effectively is a stable and predictable judiciary. Therefore, to effectively and efficiently address the needs of the State of Texas and its citizens, it is essential to have and support a competent judiciary.¹ Adequate judicial compensation is one of the many factors that contribute to the support of the judiciary.

In 2007, the Texas Legislature formed the Judicial Compensation Commission (the “Commission”) specifically to look at this factor and, each biennium, recommend the proper salaries to be paid by the state for all justices and judges of the Supreme Court, the Court of Criminal Appeals, the courts of appeals, and the district courts.

Findings

Based on the information it has gathered and reviewed, the Commission makes the following findings:

- In order to maintain a strong, qualified and independent judiciary, and in order to attract qualified candidates and retain experienced judges, appropriate judicial compensation is essential.
- The last judicial salary increase effective September 1, 2013, increased the salaries of the state’s judges by 12% and brought them to a level that was consistent with the pace of inflation based on the judicial salaries in effect in 1991.
- At the end of the 2016-2017 biennium, judicial salaries will again begin to lag behind the rate of inflation and be lower than salaries paid in 1991 when factoring inflation.

- While maintaining a 1991 level of compensation should be a goal so that real compensation does not decrease with inflation, the 1991 level of compensation in the 2018-2019 biennium is inadequate to recruit and retain the best judges for Texas.
- The salary of Texas' Supreme Court justices and Court of Criminal Appeals judges ranks 25th in the nation when compared with the salary of other high court judges; the salary of Texas' Courts of Appeals justices ranks 23rd in the nation when compared with the salary of other appellate judges; and the salary of Texas' District Court judges ranks 26th in the nation when compared with the salary of other general-jurisdiction court judges.
- The age of judges serving in the Texas judiciary is increasing, and it is anticipated that many may retire in the near future making it more important than ever to set compensation at a level adequate to recruit a future generation of judges to the bench.
- Regular, systematic increases make judicial compensation more predictable and are essential to ensure that judicial compensation remains at a level that is sufficient to attract a competent and well-qualified judiciary.
- The ability of the Commission to ensure its recommendations are brought before the Legislature is hampered by the fact that there is no formal mechanism for legislators to consider the recommendation.

Recommendations

As a result of its findings, the Commission recommends that salaries of the justices and judges of the Supreme Court, the Court of Criminal Appeals, the 14 courts of appeals, and the district courts be established as shown in the table below for the 2018-19 biennium:

Judge	State Salary	Additional Compensation ²	Total	% Increase Above Current Total Compensation	Adjusted National Ranking
Supreme Court Chief Justice/ Court of Criminal Appeals Presiding Judge	$187,636	n/a	$187,636	---	---
Supreme Court Justice/ Court of Criminal Appeals Judge	$185,136	n/a	$185,136	10.2%	13
Court of Appeals Chief Justice	$172,208	up to $10,428	$182,636	---	---
Court of Appeals Justice	$169,708	up to $10,428	$180,136	10.2%	13
District Court Judge	$154,280	up to $20,856	$175,136	10.2%	23

Cost

The state fiscal impact of the judicial salary increases recommended by the Commission is estimated to be approximately $43.8 million, excluding proposals for longevity reform, for the 2018-2019 biennium.³ Seventy-five percent ($32,555,422) of the total cost is for judicial salaries and retirement, 25 percent ($11,209,658) is for salaries for prosecutors and county court supplements that are linked to the salary of a district judge. For more detailed information regarding the cost of implementing the Commission's recommended salaries, refer to Appendix A.

² If the Commission's recommended salary increases are adopted, county supplements could increase to the amounts shown in the chart. (See Tex. Gov't Code 659.012.) The current maximum county supplement for courts of appeals justices is $9,000 and for district court judges it is $18,000. County supplements are not mandatory and may vary by county.

³ This cost includes state-paid judicial salaries, increases in pay for state and county prosecutors, increases in funding provided for constitutional and statutory county court salaries, and impacts on the Judicial Retirement System (JRS) Plan 1 and Plan II and retired elected class members for the same time period.

Additional Recommendations

- Enact legislation requiring the Commission's salary recommendations be listed in the introduced versions of the General Appropriations Acts filed in the House and Senate;
- Reduce the number of years required to receive judicial longevity pay from sixteen years of service to two years of service and to provide the judge or justice 0.2 percent of their current monthly state salary for every year of judicial service;
- Fund an increase in the salaries of the Children's Court Associate Judges at 90 percent of a district judge's salary; and
- Delink the pension benefits of state officers and employees currently linked to the salary of a district judge.

The Commission recommended reducing longevity eligibility from sixteen years of service to two years of service and to provide the judge or justice 0.2 percent of their current monthly state salary for every year of judicial service. If the salary increase of 10.2% is not authorized, the cost of implementing this change is estimated to be $2,439,809 for the biennium. If the salary increase of 10.2% is authorized, the estimate increases to $2,833,000 for the biennium.

In the event the longevity eligibility of sixteen years of judicial service remains and the 10.2% salary increase is authorized, the state fiscal impact for the increase in longevity pay is estimated to be an additional $240,007 for the biennium.

HISTORY AND FUNCTION OF THE COMMISSION

The Judicial Compensation Commission was created by the 80th Legislature, effective September 1, 2007.⁴ It is composed of nine members who are appointed by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate to serve six-year terms. No more than three members serving on the Commission may be licensed to practice law.

The Commission is responsible for making a report to the Texas Legislature no later than December 1 of each even-numbered year recommending the proper salaries to be paid by the state for all justices and judges of the Supreme Court of Texas, the Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas, the courts of appeals and the district courts. In recommending the proper salaries for the justices and judges, the Commission is required to consider the factors listed in Section 35.102(b) of the Texas Government Code. (See page 6).

The commission held its first meeting of the biennium on September 9, 2016, and reviewed data relating to the factors to be considered in setting judicial compensation. The commission took public comment on issues related to judicial compensation on the morning of October 13, 2016. In the afternoon, the commission met again and made the recommendations included in this report.

The Commission also met on November 22, 2016 to adopt this report. The minutes of the Commission's meetings for the biennium are available on the Commission's webpage at: www.txcourts.gov/jcc.aspx.

CURRENT STRUCTURE OF JUDICIAL SALARIES

The state salary of justices and judges of the Supreme Court, the Court of Criminal Appeals, the courts of appeals and the district courts are set by the Texas Legislature in the General Appropriations Act. Section 659.012 of the Texas Government Code provides the salary minimums that must be paid by the State and provides salary differentials that must be maintained between the three levels of the judiciary paid by the state—the highest appellate courts, the intermediate appellate courts and the district courts. In addition, Sections 31.001 and 32.001 of the Texas Government Code authorize counties to supplement the salaries of the courts of appeals justices and the district court judges that have jurisdiction in their counties.

Current Judicial Compensation Levels
Judge	State Salary	Additional Compensation ⁵	Total
Supreme Court Chief Justice/ Court of Criminal Appeals Presiding Judge	$170,500	n/a	$170,500
Supreme Court Justice/ Court of Criminal Appeals Judge	$168,000	n/a	$168,000
Court of Appeals Chief Justice	$156,500	up to $9,000	$165,500
Court of Appeals Justice	$154,000	up to $9,000	$163,000
District Court Judge	$140,000	up to $18,000	$158,000

Effective September 1, 2013, the annual state salary of a district judge increased from $125,000 to $140,000.⁵ The total annual salary including county supplements for a district judge is limited to $158,000—$5,000 less than the combined salary from state and county sources provided for a justice of a court of appeals. In counties with more than five district courts, local administrative district judges are entitled to an additional $5,000 from the state.

Of the 465 district court judges in the state, only 9 do not receive a county salary supplement. Seventy-two percent (333 judges) receive the maximum salary allowed by law. A table listing the county supplements received by district judges is provided in Appendix B.

The annual salary of a justice of a court of appeals is 110 percent of the state salary of a district judge and is currently $154,000. The total annual salary including supplements for a court of appeals justice, other than a chief justice, is limited to $5,000 less than the salary of a justice on the Supreme Court, for a current maximum of $163,000. Chief justices of the courts of appeals are entitled to an additional $2,500 from the state.

⁵ The Judicial Compensation Commission had recommended an increase to $151,909.

All 80 of the justices of the 14 courts of appeals in Texas receive county supplements. Seventy-four, or 92 percent, of the justices receive the maximum salary allowed by law. A table listing the county supplements received by the justices of the courts of appeals is provided in Appendix C.

A justice or judge on the highest appellate courts—the Supreme Court and the Court of Criminal Appeals—is entitled to an annual salary from the state that is equal to 120 percent of the annual state salary of a district court judge, for a current salary of $168,000. The chief justice of the Supreme Court and the presiding judge of the Court of Criminal Appeals are entitled to an additional $2,500 from the state. None of the justices or judges sitting on the highest courts of Texas are entitled to receive any county supplements.

Judges who have completed at least 16 years of service also receive longevity pay in an amount equal to 3.1 percent of the judge’s current monthly state salary (approximately $362 per month, or $4,340 per year for district judges; $398 per month for intermediate appellate court judges; $434 per month for high court justices and judges). Longevity pay is not dependent on whether a judge serves on a district, intermediate appellate, or high court.

Presiding judges of the administrative judicial regions,⁶ and district judges who preside over silica or asbestos multi-district litigation are entitled to additional compensation as well.⁷

FACTORS REQUIRED TO BE CONSIDERED BY THE COMMISSION

In determining what a “proper” salary would be, the Commission is required to consider the following eight factors:

- 1) the skill and experience required of the particular judgeship at issue;
- 2) the value of compensable service performed by justices and judges, as determined by reference to judicial compensation in other states and the federal government;
- 3) the value of comparable service performed in the private sector, including private judging, arbitration, and mediation;
- 4) the compensation of attorneys in the private sector;
- 5) the cost-of-living and changes in the cost-of-living;
- 6) the compensation from the state presently received by other public officials in the state, including:
 - a) state constitutional officeholders;
 - b) deans, presidents, and chancellors of the public university systems; and
 - c) city attorneys in major metropolitan areas for which that information is readily available;
- 7) other factors that are normally or traditionally taken into consideration in the determination of judicial compensation; and
- 8) most importantly, the level of overall compensation adequate to attract the most highly qualified individuals in the state, from a diversity of life and professional experiences, to serve in the judiciary without unreasonable economic hardship and with judicial independence unaffected by financial concerns.⁸

The following is a summary of the Commission’s analysis of the data collected for purposes of determining the proper salary for the state’s justices and judges of the Supreme Court, the Court of Criminal Appeals, the courts of appeals, and the district courts.

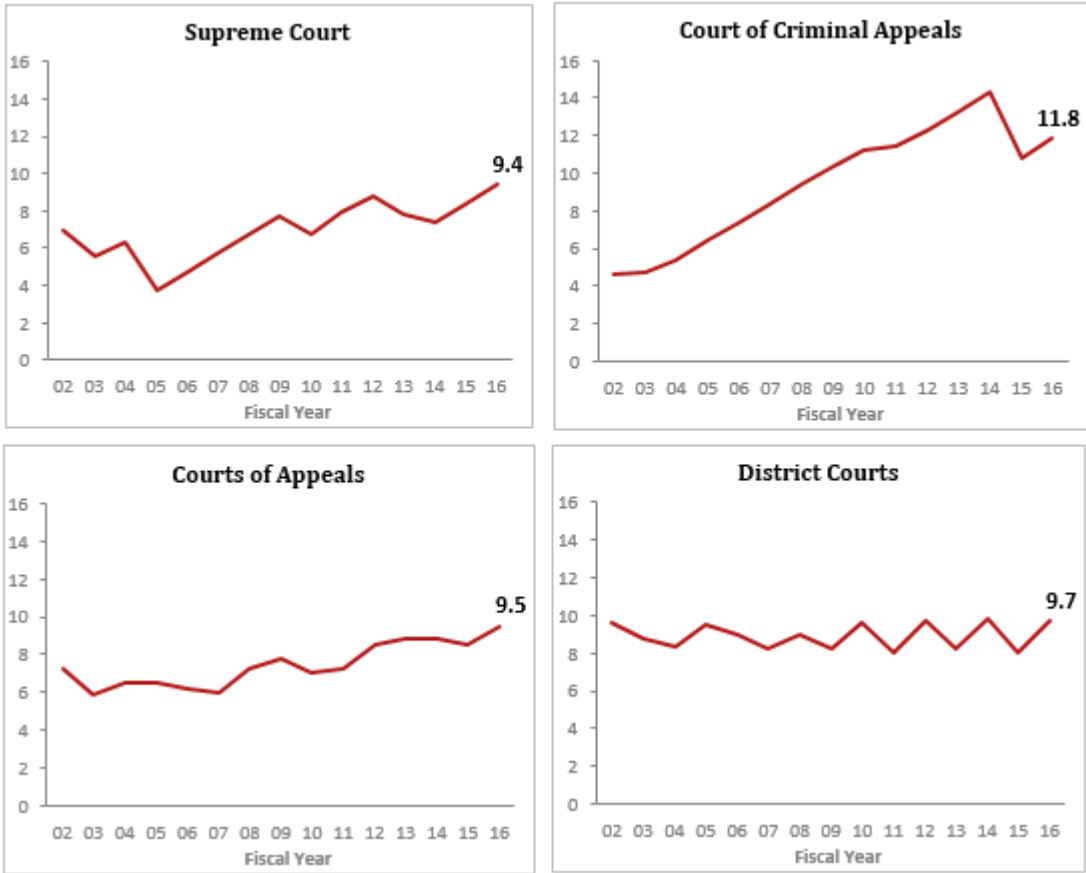

⁸ Government Code, Section 35.102(b).

Factor 1: Skill and Experience Required of the Particular Judgeship at Issue

District court judges must be at least 25 years old and have been a practicing lawyer or judge, or both combined, for at least four years. Appellate court justices and judges must be at least ten years older—35 years or older—and have practiced law or been the judge of a court of record and practiced law for at least 10 years.

Data reviewed by the Commission show that the Texas state judiciary is very experienced. As of September 1, 2016, active district judges had served an average of 9 years and 7 months on the bench and an average of 30 years as attorneys (including the years of judicial service). Justices of the intermediate appellate courts had served an average of 9 years and 5 months on the bench and an average of 31 years as attorneys. Justices on the Supreme Court has served an average of 9 years and 4 months on the bench and an average of 32 years as attorneys. Judges on the Court of Criminal Appeals had served an average of 11 years and 8 months on the bench and an average of 34 years as attorneys.

Average Years of Judges' Service on Current Bench

Average number of years indicated in parentheses

This information reveals that the Judiciary is able to attract individuals to the bench who have significant experience. While this experience may be viewed positively, it may also indicate that compensation is a barrier to younger but still experienced attorneys. Instead, those younger attorneys may be required to pursue private practice, where compensation levels are often significantly higher, before entering public service.

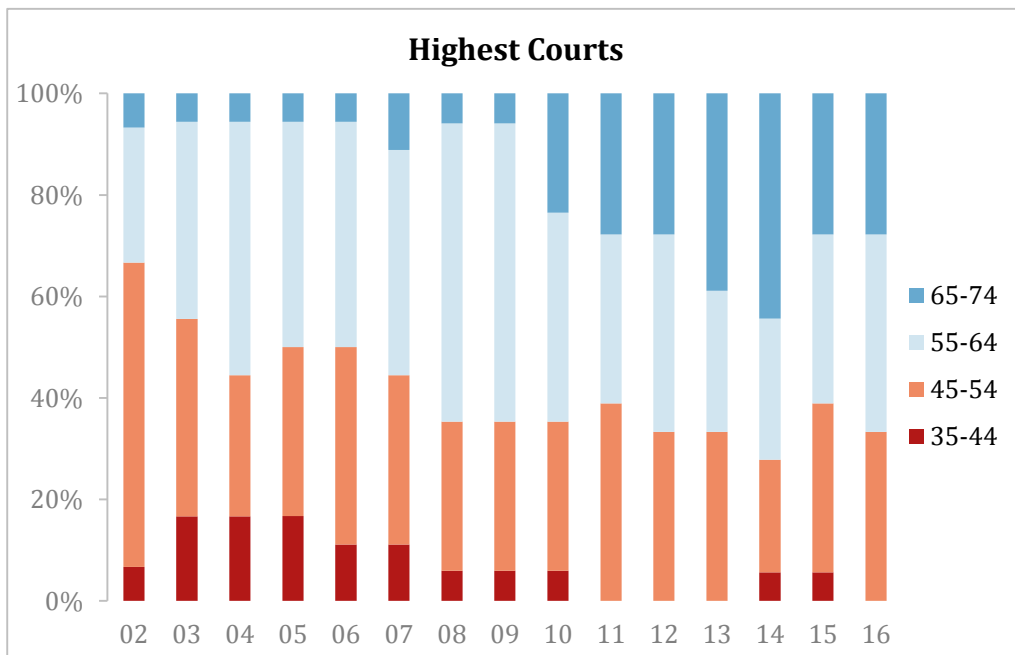

Demographic profile data on the ages and service on the bench for Texas judges shows that while the years of service on the bench has stayed consistent over the past decade at most court levels, the age of those serving as judges has increased. At the district court level, over 46 percent of the judges serving on the bench in 2003 were between the ages of 45-54 and just under 33 percent of the judges serving were between the ages of 55-64. That demographic has switched in 2016 where the majority of judges now are between the ages of 55-64 or above. The three younger age ranges are decreasing while the three older age ranges are increasing.

The intermediate appellate court demographic shift is even more dramatic. While 45 percent of justices were between the ages of 45-54 in 2003, only 23 percent are in that age range now and almost 70 percent of the justices are now over the age of 55.

The demographic shift has occurred at the highest appellate courts as well. In 2003, 39 percent of the justices/judges were between the ages of 45-54, while only 33 percent of the justices/judges are now in that age range today. While only 47 percent of the justices were over 55 in 2003, 67 percent of the justices/judges are now in that age range.

With the reality that a large percentage of judges and justices may be retiring in the near future, it is more important than ever to ensure that compensation is set at a level adequate to recruit the future generation of judges and justices to the bench.

Factor 2: Value of Compensable Service Performed by Justices and Judges, as Determined by Reference to Judicial Compensation in Other States and the Federal Government

Other States - A wealth of data exists about the judicial salaries in other states. These data have been collected by the National Center for State Courts (“NCSC”) for each year since 1974. The NCSC provides data on the actual and “normalized” salaries of judges. The purpose of normalizing data is to allow for an apples-to-apples comparison of salaries between states by adjusting salaries in each state by a cost-of-living factor to determine the purchasing power of that salary in a given state. The Center uses the most widely accepted United States source of cost-of-living indices, the indices produced by the Council for Community and Economic Research (C2ER, formerly known as the ACCRA organization).⁹

For its comparison of compensation in other states, the Commission focused on salaries in the six most populous states, including Texas.

Although Texas state judges received an increase in salary as of September 1, 2013, the state salaries of state judges in Texas continue to lag behind the salaries of judges at corresponding levels in all five states closest to Texas in population.

State Salaries of Judges in the Six Most Populous States as of July 1, 2016 Listed in Population Order
Judge	California	Texas	New York	Florida	Illinois	Pennsylvania
High Courts	$233,888	$168,000	$213,600	$162,200	$224,628	$203,409
Court of Appeals	$219,272	$154,000	$203,400	$154,140	$211,416	$191,926
District Courts	$191,612	$140,000	$193,000	$146,080	$194,001	$176,572

Federal Judges¹⁰ - In the past, the Commission has chosen not to tie its recommendation to the salaries of federal judges. No other state does so, and federal salaries are not normalized; that is, a federal judge in California earns the same salary as a federal judge in Illinois, even though there is a large difference in the cost-of-living between those states. The Commission did take notice that federal judge salaries far outpace Texas judges’ salaries. For the previously stated reasons, the Commission did not consider federal judges’ salaries in making its recommendation.

¹⁰ Federal district court judges are currently paid $199,100; circuit court of appeals justices are paid $211,200 and associate justices on the United States Supreme Court are paid $244,400. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court is paid an additional $11,100.

Factor 3: Value of Comparable Services Performed in the Private Sector, Including Private Judging, Arbitration and Mediation

In the past, the Commission was unable to gather definitive information about the rates of compensation that can be obtained in the private sector by serving as a private judge, arbitrator or mediator. As a result, the Commission did not examine data for this factor.

Factor 4: Compensation of Attorneys in the Private Sector

The Commission reviewed data collected by the State Bar of Texas in its 2015 Income Fact Sheet.

Lawyers with 11 to 15 years of experience had a median salary of $140,000 and an average salary of $182,000. Lawyers with 16 to 20 years of experience had a median salary of $155,000 and an average salary of $209,000.

The state-funded portion of salaries for district and intermediate appellate court judges is less than the average salary of lawyers overall, and the state-funded portion of salaries for all judges is less than the average salary of lawyers with more than 11 years of experience even though over half of Texas' judges have been licensed attorneys for more than 30 years.

Comparison of District Judge Salaries to Median and Average Salaries of Private Practitioners

To become a judge, many attorneys may not only have to take a decrease in salary but may also have to relinquish many opportunities for income and investment due to the code of judicial conduct that is unique to the judicial branch of government.

While every public servant knows that they are unlikely to earn as much as they would in the private sector, the current level of and process for establishing judicial compensation are disincentives for high quality, experienced attorneys to enter the judiciary. They are also incentives for current judges to leave the judiciary, as has been testified to by numerous judges at each of the Commission's Public Comment Committee meetings held since the creation of the Commission.

Factor 5: Cost-of-living and Changes in the Cost-of-living

Reported by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Consumer Price Index for all Urban Workers (CPI-U) is a measure of the average change over time in the prices paid by urban consumers for a market basket of consumer goods and services, such as transportation, food and medical care.

The following chart illustrates the relationship between judicial salaries and the CPI-U from 1991 to present. From 1998 to 2005, judicial salaries stayed static while inflation (measured by the CPI-U) climbed by 20 percent. This trend continued again between 2005 and 2013, where judicial salaries remained unchanged while inflation increased by another 20 percent. The salary increase effective September 1, 2013, brought the salaries to an amount that is slightly above the rate of inflation after having been outpaced by inflation from December 2005 (when the last salary increase prior to the September 2013 increase was implemented) to September 2013, by 20.5 percent. The chart also shows that if another judicial salary increase is not implemented in the upcoming legislative session, judicial salaries will again fall behind the rate of inflation in FY 2018.

Note: This chart assumes that the salaries of judges in 1991 were proper and adequate, which may or may not have been the case.

As noted in previous reports, the Commission also finds this chart to be a compelling display of:

- the inconsistent and unpredictable changes made to judicial salaries over the years;
- the eroding power of inflation on judicial salaries; and
- the substantial increases that had to be made to “catch up” salaries with the cost-of-living due to the inconsistent and infrequent adjustments made to judicial salaries.

This unpredictable pattern of adjustments can cause an otherwise adequate salary to become inadequate and financially worrisome. In addition, while the occasionally significant increases made to judicial salaries may seem to “catch up” salary levels to the cost-of-living, the judges actually lose potential income from interest they could have earned on increased salary levels during that period.

The Commission understands and appreciates the need of the Legislature to control the budget by evaluating each biennium the effect of proposed increases, and so the Commission is making a specific recommendation only for the upcoming biennium. As stated in several of its previous reports, the Commission believes that anticipating regular adjustments is one of the most important policy goals to be achieved for Texas judicial salaries. The current system for compensating judges is unpredictable and creates lengthy periods during which judges’ compensation is eroded by inflation. Regular, systematic increases would make judicial compensation more predictable and would offset the effects of inflation.

As this Commission is the body statutorily charged with this regular review, ensuring that the Legislature has an opportunity to review the Commission’s recommendations in a formal process is important. In the current structure, there is no formal mechanism for such review, as the Commission’s recommendations do not get automatically presented to the Legislature in the appropriations process.

Factor 6: Compensation from the State Presently Received by Other Public Officials

The Commission is required by statute to consider the compensation from the state presently received by other public officials in the state, including state constitutional officeholders; deans, presidents, and chancellors of the public university systems; and city attorneys in major metropolitan areas for which that information is readily available.

In the past, none of the salaries for other public officials have been compelling other than the salaries of county court at law judges. The results of the data gathered by the Office of Court Administration (OCA) reveal that county court at law judges in five counties make more than the maximum salary of a district judge, including county salary supplements. The county court at law judges in two counties make more than the chief justices and justices of the intermediate appellate court.

County	Salary as of March 2016
Montgomery	$174,320
Starr	$170,160
El Paso	$169,022
Wise	$168,500
Kendall	$166,473

Factor 7: Other Factors Traditionally Considered

Except for a brief discussion on judicial turnover, the Commission did not consider any other factors that are not already discussed above. To provide the Legislature with information to facilitate legislation that ensures that the compensation of state judges is adequate and appropriate, the 79th Texas Legislature charged the OCA with collecting information related to state judicial turnover. Section 72.030 of the Texas Government Code requires OCA to obtain data on the rate at which state judges resign from office or do not seek re-election, as well as the reason for these actions. The results for the latest report are available on OCA's website at <http://www.txcourts.gov/statistics/judicial-salaries-turnover>.

Sixty judges voluntarily left judicial service between September 1, 2013 and August 31, 2015. The judicial turnover rate during Fiscal Years 2014 and 2015 was 15.1 percent, the highest level since turnover data have been collected. The record turnover rate was present in both the election and non-election years of the biennium. Most notably, the voluntary turnover rate was 10.8 percent, exceeding the previous high voluntary turnover rate in the 2010-2011 biennium by over two percent.

The most significant factors in judges' decisions to leave were retirement and the judicial election process. The percentage of judges retiring increased over the last three biennia. More than half of the judges also indicated that salary was a factor.

Factor 8: Level of Overall Compensation that is Adequate to Attract the Most Highly Qualified Individuals, from a Diversity of Life and Professional Experiences, to Serve in the Judiciary Without Unreasonable Economic Hardship and with Judicial Independence Unaffected by Financial Concerns

The Commission viewed the analysis required by the first seven factors to be relevant to the analysis of the last factor. Based on those analyses, the Commission concludes that regular adjustments in compensation are necessary and appropriate in order to seek to attract the most highly qualified individuals, from a diversity of life and professional experiences, to serve in the judiciary without unreasonable economic hardship and with judicial independence unaffected by financial concerns. Therefore, the Commission recommends that judges' salaries be increased during the next legislative session.

OTHER CONSIDERATIONS

Increases in the salaries of district judges result, by statute, in increases in pension benefits for other state officials and employees, including legislators. The reasons why a judge's salary should or should not be increased, however, are different from the reasons why benefits of other public officials or employees should or should not be increased. This is evident in the fact that the Commission, in making its recommendation about judicial pay, is asked to consider factors that are specific to judges.

When a recommendation to increase judicial pay, however, leads to a significantly larger fiscal note than that required to increase judicial pay alone, the inevitable budget pressures make it, realistically, more difficult to achieve an increase in judicial pay. Likewise, the linkage between an increase in a judge's pay and an increase in a legislator's pension benefits can lead to perceptions of a conflict of interest.

CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Based on its evaluation of the factors the Commission is required to consider, the Commission concludes that it is necessary and appropriate to adjust judicial salaries and recommends that salaries be established as shown below for the 2018-2019 biennium:

Recommended Judicial Compensation*

Judge	State Salary	Additional Compensation ¹¹	Total	% Increase Above Current Total Compensation	Adjusted National Ranking
Supreme Court Chief Justice/ Court of Criminal Appeals Presiding Judge	$187,636	n/a	$187,636	---	---

ADDITIONAL RECOMMENDATIONS

As noted in the discussion of Factor 5 above, the Commission believes that gradual, biennial adjustments based on cost-of-living increases due to inflation are essential in order to maintain and attract top talent to the bench. It is important that individuals considering judicial service know that salary increases will be considered regularly rather than in 8-12 year windows.

For this reason, the Commission also recommends that legislation be passed during the next legislative session requiring the Commission's salary recommendations published in its report to the Legislature for the appellate courts and district courts be listed as the salary for the judges in the courts' and the Comptroller Judiciary Section's appropriation patterns in the introduced versions of the General Appropriations Acts filed in the House and Senate. This will not guarantee adequate regular adjustments, but it will ensure that legislators are given an opportunity to review the Commission's recommendations regarding the level of overall compensation that the Commission finds to be adequate to attract the most highly qualified individuals in the state, from a diversity of life and professional experiences, to serve in the judiciary without unreasonable economic hardship and with judicial independence unaffected by financial concerns.

The Commission believes that retention of well-qualified judges is an important goal. Longevity pay has long been recognized as a tool to reward individuals who remain in a certain position. However, because longevity pay for state judges and justices does not begin until the judge or justice has 16 years of service, the ability to use longevity pay as a retention tool is diminished. For this reason, the Commission recommends that the Legislature lower the number of years of service to become eligible for longevity pay to two years and provide that the judge or justice receives 0.2 percent of their current monthly state salary for every year of judicial service.

Additionally, based on the compelling information presented to the Commission regarding the salaries of associate judges appointed under Sections 201.101 and 201.201 of the Texas Family Code, the Commission recommends that the Legislature fund an increase in their salaries to 90 percent of a district judge's salary.

Lastly, the current linkage of judicial salaries to the pension benefits of other state officials and employees makes the fiscal note for judicial salaries higher than it would be solely for a judicial salary increase and the linkage to legislators' retirement benefits may give the appearance of a conflict of interest. These factors interfere with an objective assessment of adequate compensation for judges. For this reason, the Commission recommends that the Legislature "delink" the pension benefits of state officers and employees that are currently linked to the salary of a district judge.
